SUMMARY

Hung Sa Dahn is a multi-family residential property consisting of a 1910 two-story multi-family residence, a 1958 two-story duplex, and a 1950 one-story detached garage located on the west side of S. Catalina Street between Jefferson Boulevard and W. 35th Street in South Los Angeles. From 1936 to 1978, the subject property served as the headquarters of the Young Korean Academy, or Hung Sa Dahn, a civic organization founded in 1913 by the renowned Korean independence activist Dosan Ahn Chang Ho (1878-1938). In 1958, Hung Sa Dahn constructed the two-story duplex at the rear of the 1910 residence to provide housing for elder founding members of the organization. Currently the property is vacant.

Originally constructed as a single-family residence in the Craftsman architectural style, the 1910 multi-family residence is sited at the front of the lot, facing S. Catalina Street. The wood-frame building is rectangular in plan and clad in wood shingles at the upper level and a combination of wood shingles and clapboard at the lower level. It has a jerkinhead roof with flared eaves supported by wood knee brackets that is punctuated by cross-gabled dormers and clad in composition shingles. The building's east-facing, front elevation is symmetrical with a central primary entry and gabled porch roof with decorative wood members in the gable end. The entry door features a prominent wood surround flanked by partial-height sidelites. The porch has non-original wood support posts, a wood balustrade, and tile flooring. The rear, west-facing elevation features a recessed porch with arched openings infilled with wood lapped siding. Fenestration consists of vinyl sashes within original wood frames and surrounds, oriel windows with sliding vinyl sashes supported by carved wood corbels on the front elevation, bay windows, and single-hung vinyl windows in single and grouped configurations.

Constructed at the rear of the lot in 1958, the wood-frame, two-story duplex is designed in the Minimal Traditional architectural style. It is rectangular in plan and features a hipped roof with composition shingles and smooth stucco cladding. Entry to the lower unit is provided at the building's south-facing, side elevation; the upper unit is accessed by an exterior staircase with a decorative wrought-iron railing at the east-facing, front elevation. Fenestration consists primarily of vinyl sliding windows. A one-story detached garage with a gabled roof appears was constructed at the southwest corner of the lot in 1950.

The first wave of Korean immigration to the United States began in 1903, landing in Hawaii. By 1905, Koreans from Hawaii began arriving in California, and some made their way to the agricultural communities of the Central Valley and to Southern California cities such as Riverside and Claremont. In 1906, there were purportedly less than 100 Koreans residing in Los Angeles County. At that time, Korean immigrants in Los Angeles began settling in the Bunker Hill neighborhood, an area that lacked race restrictions and was ethnically diverse. In August 1910, the Empire of Japan formally annexed the Korean Empire. This effectively ceased Korean immigration to the United States because Koreans were then considered by the United States government as Japanese nationals, who since 1908 were limited from immigrating as a way to limit Japanese laborers in the United States. By 1930, there were approximately 320 Korean Americans, both first and second generations, living in Los Angeles, many of whom had relocated to the South Los Angeles neighborhood surrounding the University of Southern California. Following the Korean War in 1953 until 1965, there was a second wave of Korean immigrants to the United States consisting of approximately 14,000 students, orphaned children, and brides of servicemen returning from the war; it can be assumed that some of these immigrants came to Los Angeles. In addition to the new wave of immigration, in the late 1940s and early 1950s the Korean American community in Los Angeles was undergoing other changes with the end of discriminatory racial covenant laws that barred Asian Americans from living in certain neighborhoods. This shift towards desegregation resulted in many Korean Americans moving to middle class neighborhoods in Los Angeles and the surrounding cities, as well as the eventual creation of Koreatown in the late 1960s.

The Japanese occupation of Korea starting in 1910 had lasting impacts on the Korean community in Los Angeles; it fueled broader interest and participation in political organizations associated with the Korean independence movement and was a catalyst for widespread patriotic fervor among the Korean diasporic communities. The first Korean national organization that evolved to become the Korean National Association (KNA) was established in 1910. Initially headquartered in San Francisco, KNA had a Los Angeles branch as early as 1912 at 2 Olive Court. In the following decades, the United States became one of the bases for the Korean independence movement. Three of the movement's key leaders—Syngman Rhee, Ahn Chang Ho, and Yongman Pak— spent substantial time in the United States. Ahn Chang Ho, also known by his penname, Dosan, is most associated with Los Angeles.

Ahn Chang Ho was born in 1878 in a rural village near Pyongyang, in what is now North Korea, and immigrated with his wife, Lee Hye Ryon (Helen), to San Francisco in 1902. The Ahns moved to Riverside in 1904, where he worked as a laborer in the citrus groves, and became a leader of the small immigrant community, establishing the Korean Mutual Assistance Association in 1905. In subsequent years, Ahn emerged as a moral and political leader of the Korean independence movement, and travelled extensively between immigrant settlement communities in California, and internationally to China, Russia, Manchuria, and back to Korea. In 1919, Ahn became acting premier of the Korean Provisional Government in China, established as a government-in-exile following Japanese colonial authorities' suppression of a nationwide peaceful protest to proclaim Korean independence known as the March 1st Movement. Ahn departed his home in Los Angeles for the last time in 1926, and later died in 1938 in Korea due to complications arising from torture and harsh conditions during imprisonment.

In 1913, Ahn established Hung Sa Dahn, or Young Korean Academy, an organization dedicated to the promotion of Korean independence and Korean culture in America through building civic and political leadership capacity. In 1914, he relocated to Los Angeles, and Hung Sa Dahn's headquarters moved with him to multiple residences in the Bunker Hill neighborhood before establishing a permanent location of its own at the subject property in 1936. Initially, membership in the organization was varied, consisting of day laborers, farmworkers, and shopkeepers, as well as ambassadors and diplomats; later, members of Hung Sa Dahn included such diverse occupational backgrounds as teachers, innkeepers, businessmen, physicians, lawyers, and pastors. During Ahn's frequent absences, the organization continued to operate and expand at the subject property, which functioned as a long-standing civic, social, and cultural hub in the Korean American community until 1978.

The subject property has experienced some alterations that include an interior remodel of the 1910 residence to add a drop ceiling next to the fireplace and remove a wall between the living and dining rooms in 1932, and the replacement of the original stoop with a full-width porch, the infill of the rear porch of the Craftsman-style residence, and the replacement of some windows with vinyl windows, all at unknown dates.

The subject property was identified in the Korean Americans in Los Angeles, 1905-1980 SurveyLA Citywide Historic Context Statement as significant as the Los Angeles branch of the Korean American patriotic youth organization founded by Ahn Chang Ho in 1913.

CRITERIA

The criterion is the Cultural Heritage Ordinance which defines a historical or cultural monument as any site (including significant trees or other plant life located thereon), building or structure of particular historic or cultural significance to the City of Los Angeles if it meets at least one of the following criteria:

1. Is identified with important events of national, state, or local history, or exemplifies significant contributions to the broad cultural, economic or social history of the nation, state, city or community;
2. Is associated with the lives of historic personages important to national, state, city, or local history; or
3. Embodies the distinctive characteristics of a style, type, period, or method of construction; or represents a notable work of a master designer, builder, or architect whose individual genius influenced his or her age.

FINDINGS

Based on the facts set forth in the summary and application, the Commission determines that the application is complete and that the property may be significant enough to warrant further investigation as a potential Historic-Cultural Monument.

BACKGROUND

On June 22, 2021, the Director of Planning determined that the application for the proposed designation of the subject property as an Historic-Cultural Monument was complete. The original 30-day expiration date of July 22, 2021, per Los Angeles Administrative Code Section 22.171.10(e)1 is tolled, and a revised date will be determined pursuant to the Mayor's March 21, 2020 Public Order Under City of Los Angeles Emergency Authority re: Tolling of Deadlines Prescribed in the Municipal Code and April 17, 2020 Public Order Under City of Los Angeles Emergency Authority re: Tolling HCIDLA Deadlines and Revising Expiration of Emergency Orders. The time to act on this item has been tolled for the duration of the local emergency period. Please note that other State law provisions may also apply.

7. WRITTEN STATEMENTS

This section allows you to discuss at length the significance of the proposed monument and why it should be designated an Historic-Cultural Monument. Type your response on separate documents and attach them to this form.

A. Proposed Monument Description - Describe the proposed monument's physical characteristics and relationship to its surrounding environment. Expand on sections 2 and 3 with a more detailed description of the site. Expand on section 4 and discuss the construction/alteration history in detail if that is necessary to explain the proposed monument's current form. Identify and describe any character-defining elements, structures, interior spaces, or landscape features.

B. Statement of Significance - Address the proposed monument's historic, cultural, and/or architectural significance by discussing how it satisfies the HCM criteria you selected in Section 6. You must support your argument with substantial evidence and analysis. The Statement of Significance is your main argument for designation so it is important to substantiate any claims you make with supporting documentation and research.

Note on Romanization of Korean Hangeul:

The organization name 흥사단 is transliterated as 'Hung Sa Dahn' in this application. Many sources, including the USC Digital Library and the City of Los Angeles' SurveyLA Korean American Historic Context Statement utilize 'Hungsadan,' based on the McCune-Reischauer Romanization system that was in common use from 1937-2000. The contemporary transliteration according to the Revised Romanization of Korean system adopted in 2000 is 'Heungsadan.' The decision to use 'Hung Sa Dahn' was based on Los Angeles City Directories, Los Angeles Department of Building and Safety permit records, and the organization's own primary records during the time it occupied the subject property at 3421 South Catalina Street.

Hung Sa Dahn, 3421-3423 South Catalina Street

Historic-Cultural Monument Continuation Sheet

7A. Property Description

Site/Setting

Hung Sa Dahn is located at 3421-3423 South Catalina Street between Jefferson Boulevard and 35th Street in the South Los Angeles neighborhood. The parcel is approximately 6,223 square feet and contains a two-story Craftsman-style single-family residence, two-story Modern-style duplex, and a one-story detached garage. Landscaping in the front setback consists of mature palm trees and grass. Hardscape features on the property include a concrete driveway along the side (south) property line and central walkway connecting the front porch steps to the sidewalk Black wrought-iron fence, pedestrian gate, and driveway gate at the front (east) property line. All buildings on the site retain sufficient integrity to convey the property's significance.

Residence Exterior (3421 South Catalina Street)

Built in 1910, the primary (east) facade of the two-story Craftsman-style residence faces South Catalina Street.¹ It was originally constructed as a single-family residence, but converted into a multi-family residence at an unknown date.² The building is rectangular in plan and clad in wood shingles at the upper story and a combination of wood shingles and clapboard at the lower story. The rear (west) facade features an arcade or recessed porch with arched openings, now infilled with wood lapped siding. The building has a gable-on-hip roof with prominent jerkinheads at either end and boxed, flared eaves supported by wood knee brackets. The primary roofline is punctuated by cross-gabled dormers with decorative wood vertical members and flared eaves facing each side yard.

The building's front (east) facade is symmetrical, with a central primary entry and gabled porch roof with decorative wood members in the gable end. The entry door features a prominent wood surround flanked by partial-height sidelights; the door type and material are obscured by a non-original metal security door. Photographic evidence indicates that the current porch, which is concrete, is a later addition that replaced an original stoop with steps flanked by two heavy brick square posts. The porch features non-original wood support posts and a wood balustrade. The porch steps and porch floor are clad with tile.

Street-visible fenestration consists primarily of vinyl insert sashes within original wood frames and surrounds. The front facade features rectangular oriel windows with sliding vinyl sashes supported by carved wood corbels at both the upper and lower stories. Other fenestration includes vertically-oriented single-hung vinyl windows in single and grouped configurations.

Current photographs of the exterior show limited visibility due to the presence of a construction fence at the front property line and construction debris in the front yard, and the nomination preparer's lack of access to the site.

Residence Exterior (3423 South Catalina Street)

A two-story duplex was constructed to the rear of the two-story Craftsman-style residence in 1958.³ It is rectangular in plan and features a hipped roof and smooth stucco cladding. Entry to the lower unit is provided at the building's side (south) facade; the upper unit is accessed by an exterior staircase with a

7B. Statement of Significance

Summary

3421-3423 South Catalina Street in the South Los Angeles neighborhood served as the headquarters of the Young Korean Academy, or 'Hung Sa Dahn,' from 1936 to 1978. Hung Sa Dahn was a civic organization founded in San Francisco in 1913 by the renowned Korean independence activist Dosan Ahn Chang Ho (1878-1938). Ahn was an early leader of the Korean American community in Los Angeles, emigrating from Korea first to San Francisco in 1902, before relocating to Los Angeles in 1914. Hung Sa Dahn's headquarters moved with Ahn to multiple family residences in the Bunker Hill neighborhood (not extant) before establishing a permanent location of its own at the subject property in 1936, two years prior to Ahn's death following his incarceration as a political prisoner by Japanese colonial authorities in Seoul.

3421 South Catalina Street, which was identified as a resource in the SurveyLA Korean American Historic Context, is highly significant for its association with the Korean independence movement from 1936 to 1945, as well as its function as a long-standing civic, social, and cultural hub in the Korean American community from 1936 to 1978. In 1958, the Hung Sa Dahn purpose-built a two-story duplex on the property (identified as 3423 South Catalina Street) to house aging members. The property was part of an early concentration of Korean American residences, businesses, and civic and religious institutions that emerged in South Los Angeles beginning in the 1920s, primarily in the area bounded by Jefferson Boulevard to the north, West 37th Street to the south, South Catalina Street to the east, and Normandie Avenue to the west. Hung Sa Dahn would continue to serve an active community role at this location until 1978.

3421 South Catalina Street has been identified in SurveyLA's Korean American Historic Context Survey as eligible for listing as a Los Angeles Historic-Cultural Monument (HCM) as the long-time headquarters of Hung Sa Dahn, a significant Korean American civic organization in Los Angeles.

The property meets "Historic-Cultural Monument Criteria 1" as it exemplifies significant contributions to the broad cultural, economic, or social history of the nation, state, city, or community. The site at 3421-3423 South Catalina Street is exemplary as a rare and enduring Korean American institutional property in Los Angeles. 3421-3423 South Catalina Street was the location from which Hung Sa Dahn operated from 1936 to 1978, which is the period of significance for the property. The buildings are extant, intact, and rare examples of early institutional properties associated with Korean American immigration, settlement, and development in Los Angeles.

The property also meets "Historic-Cultural Monument Criteria 2," for its direct association with the life of historic personage, Dosan Ahn Chang Ho, a singularly important figure in Korean American history at the local, state, and national level, and in modern Korean history more broadly. Although Ahn was imprisoned abroad in Korea at the time of Hung Sa Dahn's acquisition of the property in 1936 and died two years later before he could return home to Los Angeles, he and his teachings are integral to the organization's existence over its 108-year history, including its period of significance at 3421-3423 South Catalina Street. Furthermore, the building's acquisition was facilitated through his direct efforts and served as the first and only standalone headquarters of Hung Sa Dahn in Los Angeles.

Hung Sa Dahn, 3421-3423 South Catalina Street

Historic-Cultural Monument Continuation Sheet

Together with the Korean Independence Memorial Building (headquarters of the Korean National Association, an organization also founded by Ahn; LA HCM-548) and the Dosan Ahn Chang Ho Family Home (LA HCM-1059), the subject property is one of only three extant buildings in Los Angeles that are directly associated with Ahn, a singularly important figure in the development of the Korean American community at the local, state, and national level, during his lifetime. All other physical structures associated with him have been lost, further underscoring the rarity and significance of this property under Criteria 2.

Historical Background

Much of the following information is taken from SurveyLA's Korean American Historic Context Statement. The nomination preparers highlighted the themes important to understanding how the Hung Sa Dahn and its founder, Dosan Ahn Chang Ho, fit into the broad cultural and social history of Koreans in Los Angeles. These sections are followed by information about the mission, activities, and significance of Hung Sa Dahn.

Dosan Ahn Chang Ho (1878-1938)

Early Education and Influences

Ahn Chang Ho, also known by his pen name Dosan ('island mountain'), was a Korean independence activist and a prominent leader within the Korean American immigrant communities in Los Angeles, San Francisco, and Riverside in the early twentieth century. A singularly revered figure in modern Korean history, Ahn was born in 1878 in a rural village near Pyongyang, in what is now North Korea. Ahn's views on Korea and Korean sovereignty were shaped by his experiences witnessing the Sino-Japanese War (1894-1895) as a youth. The cornerstone of his moral and political philosophy was fortifying Korea's strength as a nation-state by building up the individual potential of its citizens through mass education, gender equality, and other modern values that ran counter to the rigidly hierarchical Confucian values of Korea's Joseon Dynasty (1392-1897).

Immigration to the U.S.

Ahn's strong belief in the power of education led him to move as a teenager first to Korea's capital, Seoul, where he enrolled in and graduated from American missionary school, then on to the United States to further his studies in education for the purposes of returning to Korea and aiding its people. Already a noted orator in Korea by this time, Ahn and his new bride, Lee Hye Ryon (Helen) emigrated to San Francisco in 1902. He was instrumental in the establishment of immigrant support institutions such as the Korean Friendship Association in San Francisco, which was founded in 1903 to promote aid and offer a community for Korean immigrants.⁵

Finding it difficult to secure employment in San Francisco, the Ahns moved to Riverside in 1904, where he worked as a laborer in the citrus groves. He became a leader of the small immigrant community, establishing the Korean Mutual Assistance Association there in 1905.⁶ In subsequent years, he emerged as a clear moral and political leader of the Korean independence movement. He continued to travel extensively between immigrant settlement communities in California, and internationally to China, Russia, Manchuria, and back to Korea, which had been forcibly annexed as a colony by Japan in 1910. He established Hung Sa Dahn, or Young Korean Academy, in San Francisco in 1913.

In 1914, following an unusually cold winter that decimated California's citrus crops, Ahn and his family relocated from Riverside to Los Angeles. They settled among the emerging Korean community around the Bunker Hill neighborhood. Upon arrival, they lived at 1411 West Fourth Street, but moved to 106 North Figueroa Street by 1917. Hung Sa Dahn's headquarters moved with Ahn from San Francisco to Los Angeles, and the organization continued to operate and expand during his frequent absences.

Return to Korea

Ahn became acting premier of the Korean Provisional Government in China, which was established in 1919 as a government-in-exile following Japanese colonial authorities' brutal suppression of the March 1st Movement, a nationwide peaceful protest to proclaim Korean independence. The incident resulted in an estimated 7,500 citizen deaths and tens of thousands of injuries and arrests.⁷

Ahn departed his home in Los Angeles for the last time in 1926.⁸ Evidence suggests that he may have been deported from the U.S. by the Immigration Service after he and the Hung Sa Dahn organization were falsely reported for suspected Bolshevik ties.⁹ He planned on returning to the U.S. in 1932 to spend time with his family, including his youngest son Ralph, who was born in 1926 and whom Ahn had never seen. However, repeated arrests by Japanese colonial authorities in 1927, 1932, and 1937 thwarted his efforts.¹⁰ Ahn died in 1938 as a result of complications arising from torture and harsh conditions during his 1937 imprisonment. The Los Angeles Times published an article entitled "Angeleno Dies in Seoul,"¹¹ and a public memorial service for Ahn was held in the Los Angeles City Hall Council Chambers on March 20, 1938.¹²

Due to his untimely death, Ahn was unable to physically see Hung Sa Dahn's acquisition of the property at 3421 South Catalina Street to fruition. However, as the founder as well as physical and moral force behind Hung Sa Dahn as an organization, Ahn and his legacy are inextricably tied with the subject property.

Ahn Family

The Ahn family's legacy lived on following Ahn Chang Ho's departure from Los Angeles and his death. Helen Ahn moved with their five children, Philip, Philson, Susan, Soorah, and Ralph, into a house at McClintock Avenue and 34th Street near the University of Southern California (USC) campus in 1937. They lived at the McClintock Avenue house until 1946, during which time it became a gathering place for those supporting the Korean independence movement. It also served as a social and cultural hub for the Korean American community, particularly as a means for providing assistance to new arrivals to Los Angeles. The house was acquired by USC in 1966 and moved to an on-campus location (809 West 34th

Korean Americans in Los Angeles

Early Immigration, Bunker Hill

The United States and Korea officially established diplomatic relations in 1882. The first American missionaries arrived in Korea shortly thereafter, establishing schools, universities, hospitals, churches, and other institutions. In doing so, modern values such as democracy and mass education were introduced to Korea, heavily influencing future generations of political leaders and activists including Ahn Chang Ho.

Korean immigrants began settling in the Bunker Hill neighborhood of Los Angeles in the early 1900s. The immediate neighborhood was already considered an older part of Downtown, and lacked race restrictions. Korean Americans therefore lived side-by-side with other ethnic minorities including Mexican Americans, African Americans, and other Asian Americans.¹⁴

Florence Sherman, a former missionary to Korea, founded the Korean Methodist Episcopal Mission in 1904 at 1519 Hill Street.¹⁵ The mission's residents were among the earliest Korean Americans in Los Angeles. In addition to church services, the mission provided housing, employment assistance, and English language lessons for young immigrants, who were primarily students and day laborers. It was served by Reverend Hugh Cynn, a Korean USC student who had escaped to Los Angeles following political persecution and imprisonment in Korea.¹⁶ Cynn had known Florence Sherman from her time spent in Korea as a missionary, and this connection enabled him to immigrate to Los Angeles and matriculate as a USC student before later returning to Korea in 1911.¹⁷ The Korean Methodist Episcopal Mission closed by 1912 due to financial woes and Cynn's return to Korea.¹⁸

The Korean Presbyterian Mission was established in 1906 at 240 North Bunker Hill Avenue¹⁹. The closure of the Korean Methodist Episcopal Mission led to the merging of the two congregations as the Korean Presbyterian Church, which was located at 2 Olive Court.²⁰ As with other ethnic communities, the role of the churches for early Korean Americans in Los Angeles was an essential socio-cultural institution that extended beyond the practice of religion to include broader support functions. The churches held community events and celebrations and provided language education.

Japan's annexation of Korea in 1910 further transformed the role of overseas Koreans in the independence movement, because many political activists, students, and intellectuals were living abroad in exile. The first Korean national organization that evolved to become the Korean National Association

(KNA) was established in 1910.²¹ Initially headquartered in San Francisco, KNA had a Los Angeles branch as early as 1912 at 2 Olive Court, the same address listed in city directories for the Korean Presbyterian Church.

The Korean American community in Los Angeles grew slowly but steadily in the 1910s and 1920s as migrants continued to arrive from Hawaii, San Francisco, and farming communities in the Central Valley and Riverside. Ahn Chang Ho and other community leaders established and nurtured the growth of local civic organizations such as Hung Sa Dahn.

Community Growth and Expansion, South Los Angeles

Beginning in the 1920s, the Korean American community began coalescing and growing around the South Los Angeles neighborhood surrounding USC. Like Bunker Hill, this area was more lax in enforcing racial covenants and was ethnically diverse.²² A hand-drawn map depicts a concentration of Korean American churches, organizations, language school, community center, and residences circa 1935 in an area between Adams Boulevard to the north and Exposition Boulevard to the south, and roughly between Vermont Avenue to the east and Normandie Avenue to the west.²³

Another concentration of Korean American residences and institutions was located south of Adams Boulevard and east of Vermont Avenue around Ellendale Place, Orchard Avenue, McClintock Avenue, and 29th and 30th Streets in the 1930s. Most notable was the Dong Ji Hoi (Comrade Society), founded by Syngman Rhee, another key leader of the Korean independence movement alongside Ahn Chang Ho, and later the first president of the Republic of Korea. Rhee was the founding president of the Korean Provisional Government, which was established following the March 1st Movement. He was interested in shifting the leadership authority held by the Korean National Association (KNA) to the provisional government, and changing its name to the Korean Residents' Association, leading to long-standing animosities and factions within the independence movement between pro- and anti-Rhee supporters. It appears the Los Angeles branch was located at 2716 Ellendale Place by 1932.²⁴

The Korean American community's growth in South Los Angeles was likely due to the proximity of USC. Though not large enough to constitute a distinct enclave, the area west of campus and Exposition Park increasingly drew more Koreans in the 1920s and 1930s.²⁵ Korean American youths attended schools such as the James A. Foshay Learning Center, Manual Arts High School, and Los Angeles High School. They graduated and matriculated into American universities and enlisted in the military. Many young Korean Americans joined the U.S. Armed Forces. As children of the Korean independence movement, they felt compelled to fight against the Japanese.

The cultural center for the Korean community coalesced around Jefferson Boulevard, where two prominent buildings were constructed. After moving to a few different locations, the Korean National Association (KNA) built a simple structure at 1368 West Jefferson Boulevard in 1938.²⁶ The organization had shifted its primary headquarters from San Francisco to Los Angeles the previous year as Los Angeles' larger and growing Korean population became more prominent.²⁷ The KNA's new hall served approximately 2,000 members as the center of the Korean independence movement in the United States through political efforts to oppose the Japanese occupation of Korea and support the exiled provisional government based in China. The Korean-language newspaper The New Korea, with a political bent, was published on site.²⁸

Immediately next door to the KNA headquarters, the Korean Presbyterian Church constructed a permanent church in 1938 at 1374 West Jefferson Boulevard.²⁹ Between 1929 and 1931, the church moved from its 2 Olive Court (not extant) location to 1626 West 35th Street or Place, that appears to have been a single-family residence also the home of the pastor, Reverend C.S. Kim.³⁰ Between 1932 and 1938, the Korean Presbyterian Church was listed at 1545 West 35th Place. The church building at that location belonged to the Westminster Presbyterian Church, a long-standing African American church. The Korean church may have rented or shared the facilities with the main church.³¹ The lot on Jefferson was purchased in 1937 and the brick church constructed for $20,000, part of which was raised by member donations from the community.³² It featured a smaller auditorium, classrooms, offices, choir rooms, and a larger auditorium where services were held. Stained glass windows were installed, as was a fully operational kitchen. The grounds featured a parking lot and children's playground. With services provided in both Korean and English, the church also offered Korean language school.³³ The proximity of these two prominent institutions firmly solidified Jefferson Boulevard as the social center of the Korean American community in Los Angeles.

Korean War and Second Wave of Immigration

The Korean War (1950-1953) was fought between North Korea, with military support from the Soviet Union and China, and South Korea, with military support from the U.S. Cold War geopolitics in the aftermath of World War II led to the division of Korea into two sovereign states. Both states claimed legitimacy as the sole Korean government, resulting in a furious three-year conflict with no resolution that devastated the country.

On July 27, 1953, the armistice between the warring parties was signed, effectively bringing an end to the Korean War, despite the absence of a formal treaty. The war's impacts reverberated in Korean American communities. The Korean American community across the United States funded relief efforts to ease the suffering on the peninsula. Orphan children, displaced by the conflict, became the first immigrants from Korea to the United States since the 1920s, many of whom arrived in Los Angeles. Returning U.S. servicemen from the Korean War brought Korean brides with them. These women arrived in small numbers and were often separated from the established Korean American community by circumstance.³⁴ Students from South Korea also started to make their way to the United States in the years after World War II and the Korean War.³⁵ These three groups—the students, brides and orphans—constituted the second wave of Korean immigration to the U.S.

Approximately 14,000 Koreans arrived in the United States between 1950 and 1965.³⁶ This wave of immigration was aided by scaled-back immigration laws in the 1950s that allowed entire Korean families to claim refugee status. The arrival of refugees in Los Angeles was met by the established Korean American community with unwavering support.

In addition to the new wave of immigration, the Korean American community in Los Angeles was undergoing other changes. In 1952, the Immigration and Nationality Act (also known as the McCarran-Walter Act) was passed, which relaxed the limits on immigration from certain Asian countries.

Additionally, several court cases in the late 1940s and early 1950s challenged discriminatory racial covenant laws that barred Asian Americans from living in certain neighborhoods. This shift towards desegregation resulted in many Korean Americans moving from the previous concentration around Jefferson Boulevard between Western and Vermont Avenues to middle class neighborhoods in Los Angeles and the surrounding cities. For the most part, the nucleus of the Korean American community expanded north and west, signaling the eventual creation of the later Koreatown in the late 1960s. Some also moved further west to the Westside and over the Hollywood Hills to the San Fernando Valley.

Hung Sa Dahn

Founding and Korean Independence Movement

Ahn Chang Ho founded Hung Sa Dahn in San Francisco in 1913. The organization's mission was to build civic and political leadership capacity for the Korean independence movement from Japanese colonial rule (1910-1945). Ahn's teachings beyond the goal of independence promoted Korean sovereignty through democracy. Its membership was varied, consisting of day laborers, farmworkers, and shopkeepers, as well as ambassadors and diplomats. Discrimination led to a lack of employment opportunities for first-generation immigrants, even for those like Ahn who had a formal education. Later members of the Hung Sa Dahn included such diverse occupational backgrounds as teachers, innkeepers, businessmen, physicians, lawyers, and pastors.

When Ahn and his family relocated to Los Angeles in 1914, Hung Sa Dahn's headquarters moved with him. It operated out of their family home, first at 1411 West 4th Street, then by 1917 at 106 North Figueroa Street. Neither of these buildings are extant. Photographs from the 1910s-1930s depict the organization's members in front of the Queen Anne-style residence at 106 North Figueroa Street, on the USC campus, and gathered for picnics in parks.

Hung Sa Dahn's membership grew as the small Korean community began expanding and coalescing southward in the neighborhood surrounding USC in the 1920s and 1930s. USC students, both second-generation Korean Americans and international students from Korea, were among its members. Men and women alike were welcomed to join the organization, reflecting Ahn's progressive views and belief that gender equality would contribute to better outcomes for society at large.

It is unknown how Hung Sa Dahn came to select and purchase the property at 3421 South Catalina Street as its first standalone headquarters in 1936. However, a 1932 permit for an interior alteration indicates that there is a reception hall on the property, suggesting that the property may have already been serving multi-purpose residential and institutional uses.³⁷

Philip Ahn (1905-1978), the eldest of Ahn Chang Ho's five children and a significant figure in his own right, was closely involved with Hung Sa Dahn since his youth. As a natural-born U.S. citizen, Philip was not subject to the California Alien Land Law of 1913, one of many U.S. alien land laws designed to effectively exclude Asian and other immigrants on the basis of race by preventing individuals ineligible for citizenship from being able to purchase, own, or lease property. Philip's citizenship status enabled him to help his fellow Koreans who were not afforded such privileges. In 1924, he helped Hung Sa Dahn members purchase a rice farm in Colusa County, personally assisting them in hauling crops to Los Angeles.³⁸

Supporting Local Needs

Given the discrimination in employment and lack of opportunity to purchase property, the economic situation for many Korean immigrants in the community was dire, particularly as they grew older. One of Hung Sa Dahn's functions was to provide housing assistance to members who needed it, particularly local university students and elder founding members. Three bedrooms were located upstairs on the second floor, while the downstairs contained a large meeting room, office, kitchen, and guest bedroom.³⁹

One Hung Sa Dahn member-resident was Choon Har Kim (1896-1983), who appears to have resided at the subject property beginning in 1936.⁴⁰ Like Ahn, Kim was born in northern Korea and studied civil engineering at an American Presbyterian missionary school in Pyongyang. He was an organizer of the March 1st Movement in Korea. Kim eventually arrived in Los Angeles in 1924, where he found work operating a fruit stand in the Eagle Rock neighborhood.⁴¹ In a 1983 interview, he told the story of leaving his wife and young son behind in Korea in order to support the independence cause overseas. His son was lost and presumed dead in the Korean War, but his wife survived and he continued to support her financially from abroad for over forty years. Immigration laws prevented Kim's wife from becoming a U.S. resident or citizen until 1965, at which time she finally joined him in Los Angeles. By then, Kim had become a naturalized citizen and was able to purchase a house in San Fernando, where he resided until his death in 1983.⁴²

In 1958, Hung Sa Dahn further expanded its capacity by constructing a detached two-story duplex to the rear of the existing building. The intent was to provide housing for elder founding members of the organization. Plans for the project were approved in 1958, with a valuation of $10,000, a significant sum at the time. Dr. Marn Cha, professor emeritus of political science at California State University, Fresno, arrived from South Korea in 1957 to attend USC, and was inducted as a Hung Sa Dahn member in 1960. He recalls that an elderly couple, who he believed were founding members, lived in one of the two units.

Evolution

Korea's liberation from Japanese colonial rule in 1945 and the founding of the Republic of Korea (South Korea) in 1948 had socio-political implications for the Korean American community in Los Angeles. Hung Sa Dahn's global headquarters was moved from Los Angeles to Seoul.⁴³ With the long-desired goal of independence met, numerous organizations associated with the independence movement shifted gears towards the formation of a new government in Korea. Many who had come to Los Angeles earlier as students or religious leaders in the community returned to Korea to participate in nation-building.⁴⁴

By the 1950s and 1960s, many of Hung Sa Dahn's original founding members were elderly, leading to a need for housing to serve patriots who had served their home and adopted countries well. Dr. Cha recalls that five or six other students were inducted at the same time as he was, and that they were recruited by the existing membership, whom he considered 'old-timers,' with the intention of cultivating a new generation of leaders.

Hung Sa Dahn continued to serve as a political voice following liberation. South Korea experienced political and social turmoil in the 1950s-1980s, both on account of the Korean War and subsequent authoritarian rule, which ran counter to Hung Sa Dahn's core philosophies. The organization's focus turned to promoting democratic governance through education and study of Ahn Chang Ho's teachings, which were believed to be universal and applicable in a variety of political contexts. Therefore, although Hung Sa Dahn's sphere of influence shifted, it did not wane.

Regular guest speakers stopped by the Hung Sa Dahn headquarters to lecture on various political and philosophical topics, including prominent member and former South Korean ambassador Dr. Chang Li Wook. Helen and Philip Ahn also continued to remain actively engaged with the organization, which even led to Dr. Cha taking a job at the Ahn family's Moongate restaurant in Panorama City, where he worked for about a year as a busser.⁴⁵

Hung Sa Dahn thus continued to serve as an important social and cultural hub at the subject property until 1978, when it was sold by the organization for financial reasons. The organization is still in active operation today throughout its various chapters in South Korea, the U.S., and elsewhere in the world.

Angelino Dies in Seoul Prison

Ahn Chang Ho Held
by Japan to Halt
Korean Uprising

Ahn Chang Ho, 60 years of age, leader of the Korean Nationalist movement, who has maintained his residence in Los Angeles for thirty years, died in a Japanese prison Thursday, it was learned by cable yesterday.

The cable to the Korean National Association, which he founded and which maintained world headquarters here, informed his family that he died at Seoul, Korea, of an acute internal ailment.

HELD PRISONER

Ahn at the time was a Japanese prisoner as a precaution against a Korean uprising during prosecution of the Chinese operations. He similarly had been seized in 1932 in Shanghai during the first Sino-Japanese conflict.

Ahn Chang Ho first went to San Francisco as a student in 1902. At the age of 16 years, he stumped his country in behalf of a stronger Korea to resist aggression. In 1910 he saw his country annexed to Japan. Ahn devoted the balance of his life here and abroad in the cause of Korean independence.

CALLED TO CABINET

In 1919 he was called to Shanghai to hold a portfolio in the Cabinet of the Korean provisional government that arose that year. His last visit to his family here was in 1925.

Ahn leaves his widow and five children, Philip Ahn, film actor; Philson Ahn, who was graduated from the University of California last year, and Susan, Sarah and Ralph Ahn, all natives of California.

Chinese Repel Japan's Drive

HANKOW, March 13. (Sunday). (Exclusive)—Attempts by the Japanese in Shansi and Honan Provinces to cross the Yellow River at a dozen different points from the Great Wall north of Shansi to Chengcho have been repulsed, according to local Chinese military.

The Japanese are said to have spread a smoke screen over the river. While the Nipponese soldiers with the aid of rubber pontoons attempted to reach the western bank of the river, they were met by determined Chinese and driven back with heavy losses.

FIGHT CONTINUES

Struggles on the right bank of the river are said to be continued at Yumenkow, Puchow, Fenglingtu and Pinglu as the Chinese assailed rear positions of detached Japanese units.

The Japanese are reported generally centering in the Linfen and Houma areas, where a major battle has been proceeding for days with heavy casualties.

DRIVE REVERSED

The Chinese say their forces which had pushed toward north Shansi in the latter part of February in preparation for a general offensive, which the Japanese halted by striking first, have now about-faced and are pushing to the south.

The Japanese in South Shansi are said to be in danger of being crushed between these forces and the Chinese troops pushing westward from North-east Honan. It is claimed that the latter under Gen. Liu Ju-ming have successfully recaptured Puyang, Ching-Peng, Chihhsien, Weihsien, Tangyin and Nanlo. Claims persist that the Chinese have retaken Linhsaiwan in the south.

ISSUE REVIVED

Japanese military authorities again today raised the controversial question of foreign territorial rights in China.

Claiming jurisdiction over all persons in Chinese territory under Japanese occupation, the army issued warning against the transfer of Chinese-owned property to foreigners.

MISSION STARTED FOR KOREAN BOYS.

The only Korean mission work in the United States, so far as known, has opened its doors in Los Angeles, and yesterday services were held by a pastor preaching, Rev. Frank Conn, at the mission house, No. 1614 South Hill street. This undertaking will be one of the features of the American missionary effort hereafter.

Foreign as it may seem, no effort appears to have been made by the Christian Church of America to reach the Koreans in this country. Of the thousands of boys who have

English education and receive instruction in the Christian religion. They show aptitude for study and some have become industrious.

Most of the Korean boys have parents in various households of the city during the day, and come to the mission for their instruction at night. There are ninety classes in English, and about a week religious services are held.

While the present Korean population of Los Angeles is only a few hundred, it is expected that within the next few months there will be many more, and the work of the mission will be greatly increased.

arrived in this country have found a two-story building at the above-mentioned number, and this is to be not only a mission chapel, but a religious and educational headquarters for the Koreans in this part of the country.

Mrs. Florence M. Sherman, a former missionary to Korea, has been made superintendent of the mission, and Mr. A. W. Anderson, the secretary of the Los Angeles district, has appointed Rev. Hugh Conn, a student at the University of Southern California, as the pastor for the Koreans in this city. Mr. Conn preached last night.

There are now twenty inmates at the mission home—larger Korean boys, who are very anxious to acquire an where there are now over four thousand employed on the plantations.

Many of these people have a great desire to secure an education, and Mr. Conn stated last night that he knew of a number who had made plans to come to Los Angeles to make use of the educational advantages. He expects to see several of the young countrymen enrolled in the University of Southern California next year.

Within the range on the first floor of the 1917 school residence, there are rooms which are given over to the Korean boys, and where they keep home for themselves. It being the intention of the mission workers to encourage them to make this portion their general home, so that they may be surrounded constantly by the best Christian influences.

It is essential to keep these things in mind when considering the use of the word "God" in the Bible. The word "God" is used in many different ways in the Bible, and it is important to understand the context in which it is used. For example, the word "God" is used to refer to the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, and it is also used to refer to the angels and the saints. Therefore, it is important to understand the context in which the word "God" is used in the Bible, and to use it in a way that is consistent with the Bible's teaching.

Faded Photographs Help Tell Story of L.A.'s Ethnic Diversity

By FRED ALVAREZ
TIMES STAFF WRITER

Susan Ahn dropped her head into one open palm and said nothing. For several seconds, maybe even a minute, she appeared to be sleeping. But she was trying hard to remember.

As if flipping the pages of a history book, Ahn sifted through her memory to try to put a date to the faded black-and-white photo of a young woman with black hair and a wide smile. She easily recognized herself in the photo, even if others could not.

Now, if only she could remember when it was taken. "1945," she finally said as a group of young historians wrote down every word. "Now it's coming back to me."

There was a lot of remembering as Asian-Americans, mostly Korean-Americans, gathered to contribute time-worn but valuable snapshots to a citywide project known as "Shades of Los Angeles."

Carolyn Kozo, the city's senior photo collection librarian, said the idea is to illustrate the historic, political and cultural contributions of Southern California's ethnic communities from 1860 to 1960.

"Photographs are a common denominator," said Kozo, who developed the idea after discovering that the Central Library's collection of 2.5 million photographs had few images documenting the city's ethnic heritage. "They help us to discover that we're really alike in many ways."

The project has already reproduced hundreds of photographs from the family archives of the city's African-American and Latino residents.

Over the weekend, more than a dozen Asian-American families came to a television studio near Koreatown to share their memories with the rest of Los Angeles. Some brought photos in shopping bags and cardboard boxes. Others, such as Ahn, brought stacks of family photo albums.

Ahn's father, Doan Ahn Chang Ho, was a leader of the movement to free Korea from Japanese rule in the years after the 1910 occupation. He died in 1938 after six years of imprisonment, she said—nearly a decade before Korea was liberated.

Ahn became the first Korean-American to join the Navy and its first woman gunnery officer.

"I thought the only way to fight for the cause was to join the Navy and fight the Japanese," she said, flipping through a tattered photo album. "That is what my father taught me."

The pages of some albums were falling apart, their pages wrinkled with time. Many pictures were so faded and yellowed that librarians said they could not be reproduced.

Although some photo collections had been in families for generations, Ildong C. Park put an album together in a night, chronicling her mother's life.

Her mother, Young Son Choo Chey, was born in what is now South Korea at the turn of the century. She made her way to Ohio, where she attended high school and earned a sociology degree from Oberlin College.

Park brought pictures of her mother as a girl and young woman.

There was a photo of the young woman balancing on a railroad track. In another, she was winding up to throw a snowball. Yet another was a group shot of her mother and other college students who belonged to a club for foreigners.

"Before she passed away," Park said, "I wanted to show these pictures to someone."

After her mother and father met in New York and married in 1930, the couple returned to Korea, intending to stay two years.

Because the Japanese occupiers tightened their grip, the couple ended up staying 20 years. Their daughter was born there.

"They took my mother's recipes because they thought they were in code," said Park, recalling weekly visits by detectives to her childhood home. "This is a sad story of that time. I still see these images in my head. You never forget those things."

A Journey of My Memories of Hung Sa Dahn/Young Korean Academy (1959-2021)

By Marn J. Cha

Presented to the effort to save Hung Sa Dahn/Young Korean Academy Lodge from demolition, June 14, 2021

My name is Marn J. Cha, 84, born and raised in Korea. I came to the U.S. as a student in 1957, and have earned all my three degrees, B.A., MPA, and Ph.D. from the University of Southern California. Most of my academic career was spent in the political science dept of Cal. State University, Fresno, California. I have retired from my professorship at Cal. State Fresno in 1910, and am currently a professor emeritus of political science.

The highlights of my experiences with Hung Sa Dahn in general, and with the current standing structure that once served as the Hung sa Dahn , the Young Korean Academy, lodge/office at 3421 S. Catalina Ave., Los Angeles, California, 90007, in particular, will be described and presented in the following order. My specific personal experience with the building, followed by my knowledge of and experience with the events of historical import that took place in the lodge, and how these experiences as well as my encounter with historical treasure trove stored in Reedley and Dinuba, California late in my career have handed to me my late life avocation. That being: studying and researching Dosan Ahn Chang Ho and Hung Sa Dahn/YKA.

- My Personal Experience with the Bldg.

It was Fall, 1959, when I was strolling around South side of the USC campus, to be specific Jefferson Blvd and South Catalina Ave area, and noticed at a mid-point a two story house with a unique structure, a arch like porch. Therein, three Chinese characters, were inscribed in black, 興士團, read in Korean, Hung Sa Dahn. I could read these Chinese characters, 興, meaning raising, 士, meaning elite, literati, and 團 meaning a circle, a gathering, a community. Hence, a community where you raise literati elite!

I was passing by it with a curious look at this signboard and then a couple of elderly Asian gentlemen standing at the porch talking to each other sounded like Korean. They too noticed that I, a young Asian boy, passing by glancing at them. One of them ventured to ask me in English what nationality I was. I said Korean and they almost yelled at me that they were Koreans, too. They invited me into the house, which I subsequently learned that it was serving as Hung Sa Dahn's lodge/office in America.

The house was of a substantial size with a huge living room, an office space, a separate kitchen and a small room attached to the kitchen, which I took must be a living quarter for an in-house housekeeper or maid. It had upstairs which I remember had three bedrooms. During my subsequent visits to the lodge/house which were at least every other week, I learned that an elderly man, whose name was if I remember correctly Kim Jong Hak (I could be wrong about his name) was living in the down stair room adjacent to the kitchen. He was a long time resident, a Hung Sa Dahn member, an admirer of Dosan Ahn Chang Ho, and an early immigrant who was then retired. He has never been married. No place to retire to and poor. The lodge provided to such Hung Sa Dahn member a space to live out their life.

The up stair rooms were rented out to students at a nominal rent. Whenever I stopped by the lodge, there was always someone. Quite often the living room served as a social space for USC Korean students as well as those going to school elsewhere in Los Angeles area. It was a bustling place with young people come and go, and a staff or two maintaining Hung Sa Dahn office occupying the West side of the first floor. File cabinets and a huge desk made up the office ambience against the background of Dosan Ahn Chang Ho's portrait hanging on the wall.

Now, going back to when I stepped into the house for the first time in 1959. One of the two gentlemen who met me at the porch volunteered to tutor me about Ahn Chango Ho and Hung Sa Dahn since I did not know anything the person and his organization. I too was enormously interested to know more about it. This has led to my visiting the lodge for the next some months to have sessions with this elderly gentleman, whose name was Harr Hee Oak. His intention was to recruit me into Hung Sa Dahn/YKA. Mr. Harr thought that I was ready to face a question and answer session, a critical step for a candidate to achieve his/her general membership.

When this question and answer rite of passage was about to take place in 1960, a year after my chance encounter with the lodge and the two gentlemen in 1959, Dr. Chang Li Wook, a prominent Hung Sa Dahn leader who served formerly as South Korean ambassador to the U.S. was visiting Los Angeles. So, Dr. Chang took charge of hosting my YKA admission test session. I showed up at an appointed time and faced Dr. Chang for the first time. He fired at me a series of friendly but tough questions, which I answered and defended. I recall it took a good couple of hours. He and a score of fellow members watching it pronounced that I have passed and thusly commissioning me to the full membership. From thereon I felt that the lodge was like my second home. I attended YKA monthly meetings and special events. My casual stopping by the lodge to see friends and simply socialize also took place quite often.

In sum, the Hung Sa Dahn/YKA building was a multi-purpose structure: Hung Sa Dahn/YKA's U.S. headquarters and office, a living quarter for Hung Sa Dahn retirees, providing housing to needy Korean students, and social space for the Korean student community. The students, who passed through a period of their social life in the Hung Sa Dahn/ YKA lounge, have grown and developed into community leaders, professionals, and contributors to American as well as Korean society. Now, the events that took place at the lodge that I remember.

- The notable as well as routine events that took place in the lodge

The routine events were Hung Sa Dahn/YKA monthly meetings. There were about 30 or so attendees mostly YKA members. We sat on chairs spread out in the living room, a familiar pattern whenever meetings took place. These meetings then as now proceeded with singing national anthem, followed by a reading of Dosan's words, attending to business items, and a lecture given by a designated member or an invited speaker. The YKA's traditional revolving handshake concluded the meetings. Most of talks I attended then related to the Korean post independence topics, how for the members to cultivate YKA virtues and values that serve the independent Korea's modernization and development. In 1959, as I remember, Dr. Chang Li Wook gave a lecture on his way to Washington D.C. I distinctly remember his lecture was how we should deal with a gulf between ideals and reality, followed by a topic on unity in diversity, and diversity in unity.

My most memorable event was attending a general conference of all YKA members in the U.S. that was held at the lodge in December 1960 (refer to a group picture attached). It was a joyful occasion to welcome a score of young people into the membership one of whom was me. Dr. Chang Li Wook was present as was Mrs. Helen Ahn, the wife of Dosan Ahn Chang Ho and their first son, Philip Ahn, then a well-known Asian actor in Hollywood. My meeting with Mrs. Helen Ahn and Philip Ahn here got me a job. They asked me I would be interested in working for their restaurant. Then the Ahn family owned and operated a Chinese restaurant called Moongate in Panorama city near Van Nuys in San Fernando Valley. I worked for them a year, a great experience to know the Ahn families. Ever since, I have maintained a life-long friendship with the Ahn family.

The 1960s were a difficult period for Hung Sa Dahn/YKA, as the military rule was governing Korea and Hung Sa Dahn/YKA was considered anti-military. Hence, an object of suppression by the Korean military intelligence! Yet, the Hung Sa Dahn weathered it out OK with its identity as the oldest civic organization remaining intact.

Some years after the 1960 (I can't remember exact year), I noticed a duplex being built in the back of the lodge. When it was completed, the apt occupant invited me into his new place. It was Mr. Kang, an elder brother of another Kang at whose San Francisco residence Dosan Ahn Chang Ho founded Hung Sa Dahn/YKA in 1913. This Mr. Kang, a staunch YKA member, lived most of his life in Chicago working as a cook. So, he asked me to excuse him if he coughs a lot while we talked. He said that as a cook, he was exposed to smoke too much, hence, tending to cough often, which I noticed he did. He and his wife served me refreshment. I learned that his wife was a descendant of a Korean patriot, one of thirty three signatories of the Korean declaration of independence in 1919, the mass Korean nationalist protest against the Japanese occupation of Korea.

As I was making progress in my studies at USC, eventually finishing my doctorate, my attendance of the YKA meetings tapered off. By the time I secured my tenure track position at Cal. State University, Fresno in 1969, I left the town and could not make to any meetings. In the interim I heard via rumor mill that the lodge at 3421 S. Catalina Ave., was sold to a private party. The reason being: the area becoming crime ridden and hence increasingly undesirable to live in and maintain it.

- Hung Sa Dahn/YKA and my avocation

While pursuing a career and raising a family in Fresno, I stumbled upon a trove of historical treasures in the two small farm towns in the vicinity of Fresno, namely, Dinuba and Reedley twenty some miles South of Fresno. It was in summer, 2002. It coincided with a year before the Korean U.S. immigration centennial celebration was to commence. What I found was over two hundred early Korean immigrants' graves in the Reedley and Dinuba cemeteries. Gravestones provided basic info on each deceased's birth, death dates and birthplace. Most of them were born in the last quarter of the nineteenth century and died during the first half of the twentieth century. According to their birth places, most of them came from North Western and Southern parts of the Korean peninsula. They built a church, Dinuba Korean Presbyterian Church in Dinuba, California in 1912, followed by another Presbyterian church in Reedley built in 1938. The latter structure is still standing. The church in Dinuba was demolished in 1989. Unmistakable evidence: this many Korean immigrants settled, worked, lived and died in Central California.

What may have drawn them to come to this part of California? How did the Koreans' emigration to the U.S. come about? What may have been their life like here? Where are their offspring? What may they have left? What does this all mean to the history of Korean immigrants to the U.S. and the larger context of American history? These questions have opened up to me a whole new venture, a historical research into the Korean diaspora. It suggested a long-term commitment: an academic research as well as historical preservation. To this end, with a handful of supporters in the Fresno area, I have formed Central California Korean Historical Society (hereafter CCKHS) in 2002. The year 2002 also coincided with a year before the Korean government and Korean American community were preparing to celebrate the Korean U.S. immigration centennial. The Korean U.S. Immigration Centennial Commemoration Committee came to aid our effort with an initial research grant.

My research has yielded two major written products among others: a paper I have delivered at the foregoing centennial commemorative seminar/conference, "the First Korea town in the U.S. A. mainland: Dinuba and Reedley, California" in 2003. Seven years later, 229 page book I have authored, "Koreans in Central California: A Study of Settlement and Transnational Politics" by University Press of America followed. In between the CCKHS has built a 2/3 replica of the Korean Independence Gate in Seoul, Korea in Reedley. Three other monuments were built and erected in Dinuba and Reedley that preserve the early Korean immigrants' memories. If one comes to these two towns, he or she will find that they are virtually a walking Korean immigrant museum. The monuments are a testimony to trials and tribulations of the Korean immigrant pioneers.

Of Korean immigrant pioneers, a towering figure was Dosan Ahn Chang Ho. His role was critical to organizing the Korean community, galvanizing it to contribute its energies and resources to the cause of the Korean independence movement. This has rekindled my old connections with Hung Sa Dahn/YKA. I began to research in-depth Dosan Ahn Chang Ho, his philosophy and values and what Hung Sa Dahn/YKA meant to him. By this time I have retired from my professorship and taken up studying and researching Dosan Ahn Chang Ho and his legacy, Hung Sa Dahn/YKA, as my full time avocation. This has led me to produce under the auspices of Hung Sa Dan and CCKHS 85-page English text entitled, "Tell Me About the YKA" in 2018. The book affords English speaking readers a resource by which for them to better understand Hung Sa Dahn/YKA, what it stands for, and its moral and philosophical messages.

The more I delve into the deeper meanings of Dosan's life and his philosophy, the deeper his insights and values come through, akin to the legacies of other prominent social thinkers and activists such as Mahatma Gandhi and Martin Luther King, Jr. In fact, for the city of Riverside having built and erected the statutes of these three sage/activists, Gandhi, Ahn and King, in the middle of its city park/promenade, is no accident. It was a well thought-out decision. This has inspired me to take on my next avocation. That is writing a book that compares and contrasts Gandhi, Dosan and King. They do indeed share a lot of commonalities. I am in the midst of completing it.

Because of the limited time and space allowed for this rendition of my memories of Hung Sa Dahn/YKA, let me conclude with a statement or two about a broader meaning of the importance of preserving the current Hung Sa Dahn structure at 3421 S. Catalina Ave., from demolition beyond the Korean community. Dosan Ahn Chang Ho, the Hung Sa Dahn/YKA founder, believed that a nation is as good as what kind of people makes up that society. It is not their wealth, military power, or material possession. What counts are the character, inner-self and moral fiber of a nation. Honesty, integrity, courage to stand up to power, love and compassion, and camaraderie and fraternity, yet, the reason and logic driven life style, taking freedom and equality as values to uphold, are what a nation ought to strive to cultivate and achieve.

For the Koreans to remake themselves to this end, they need an institution that leads the folks to change to a new character and personality. Hung Sa Dahn/YKA is an organization that shall produce such leaders who will help Korea transform. Ultimately toward what ends shall all these moral and ethical reform efforts be made? To achieve and live democracy! Dosan correctly took democracy to mean not just as a political institution and practice but also as ways of life. The foregoing virtues and values with which he intended to reform and reconstitute the Koreans were to reach democracy and live it. Thusly, whoever aspires to democracy, freedom and equality could just as well adopt Hung Sa Dahn/YKA principles and values. In short, Hung Sa Dahn/YKA has a global message.

When Dosan named Hung Sa Dahn in English the Young Korean Academy, he did not mean to refer to it as a gathering of young people or youth only. His intention was metaphorical. He refers to a gathering of newly transformed or born again people to a new personhood. In this sense, it could be the Young Nigerian Academy, or Young American Academy.

- Further larger meaning of saving the Hung Sa Dahn/YKA structure from demolition in the context of California

California and the nation are facing tremendous challenge, a challenge to combat racism, achieve social justice, and mend inequities in just about every facet of our social and economic life. California legislature responds to it with reform ideas and policies. For example, looking into reparation, mandating ethnic studies at K thru nine, colleges and universities, and strengthen Californians' voting rights and political participation. In this spirit, California State Assembly and Senate unanimously voted for ACR 269, a resolution to designate November 9th, Dosan Ahn Chang Ho's birth date as Dosan Ahn Chang Ho Day each year in California in 2018. Viewed in this larger context, preserving a structure where the ideas and philosophy, advancing morals and ethics fit for democracy and humanity, were formed and practiced, will serve as a historical resource the school age children could visit and get inspired, and adults would appreciate that spiritual and moral reforms can come from anyone and anywhere in the world. Ideas and initiatives are not a monopoly of any particular group of people.
